29.3M	USA	Mountain-200	Jordan Turner

- United States and Australia dominate revenue, representing more than 60% of total sales, indicating strong geographic concentration.
- After a relatively stable period in 2011 and slight fluctuations in 2012, the business experienced accelerated growth in 2013, indicating expansion in demand or market reach.
- Despite the overall growth trend, sales show fluctuations across months, suggesting possible seasonality or external influencing factors.
- The Mountain-200 product line is the primary revenue driver, significantly outperforming other categories. This indicates a strong market preference for mountain bikes, while other product lines contribute comparatively less to total sales.
- The concentration of revenue in a single product category suggests a potential business risk, as the company may be overly dependent on one segment.
- The absence of highly dominant customers reduces business risk and suggests that revenue is not dependent on a small number of clients.
